

Sunderland Parent Support Directory

A Guide for Practitioners and Services
Working with Families in Sunderland

This guide is designed to give details of support groups and services which can help support children and families across Sunderland.

Sunderland
Children's Trust

What is a parent support group?

A parent support group is somewhere parents can seek support and advice when a need is identified within the family.

Where are they?

They are held in a variety of settings throughout the city.

When can families use them?

Once contact has been made with the identified support group families are able to access the group at the arranged days and times etc.

Who are they for?

Parent support groups are available to all families.

How can support be accessed?

Practitioners should use the information within the guide to identify and contact the appropriate service.

How to use this guide

This guide provides detailed information of parent support groups that are available to parents. Parents are able to self refer or can be signposted to appropriate support according to their individual needs.

Autism-In-Mind (AIM)

Sunderland parents Carole and Terry Rutherford have two sons with a diagnosis of autism, they understand that living with autism can sometimes leave them and their sons feeling isolated and cut off from the real world. Many children with a diagnosis of autism now attend mainstream schools and parents rarely have the opportunity to meet up with other parents who understand the problems that they face in their daily lives. Carole and Terry know from firsthand experience what this feels like, and also how difficult it can be for our children with autism to mix and enjoy social activities and outings. Autism-in-Mind (AIM) is keen to hear from any families who feel isolated or need a listening ear. AIM has been up and running in Sunderland and Washington for 3 years and we now have around 100 families who attend our meetings and also our social activities. They hold meetings in Sunderland and Washington and also offer internet based support. AIM would like to help improve the lives of families living in Sunderland by giving parents and their children the chance to work together to provide some out of school activities for the children, and support and information for their parents. They enjoy our outings to the Fun Shack, the Cinema; they go bowling and also arrange trips out. They are aware that some children with autism do not like these activities and we are hoping to improve the range of activities that we can offer.

Tel: 0191 549 0898 (Carole and Terry Rutherford), please leave a short message and we will return your call.

Gingerbread

Gingerbread is a self help group for lone parents

The Southwick branch meets once a month on a Monday afternoon at 1pm.

The group decided that it is not only lone parents that need support and it was agreed that they would have members who may or may not have a partner.

Their primary function is for the children to have a good time and to be able to have affordable outings and fun days where parents/carers and children from all backgrounds and age groups can come together to have fun. During every school holiday we try to have at least 2 outings. We try to cater for all ages as some of our members have been with the group for a number of years and their children are getting older. The cut off age for being classed as a child as far as the group is concerned is 16.
